OF LONDON'S LIBRARIES

PREFACE.

Lack of access to the literature of his subject continually baulks the scientific worker. In London this difficulty is especially felt, retarding the movement to make the metropolis a great centre for higher study and research.

At present the contents of the many London libraries can only be ascertained by personal inspection of the manuscript catalogues, since printed catalogues are lacking, or out of date and out of print.

In the following pages an attempt is made to indicate where much of the periodical literature of Medicine and the allied Sciences may be consulted in London, Cambridge, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester and Oxford.

Users of this volume will understand that the libraries listed here are open only to the members of the institutions to which they belong and that proper introductions are essential for others. There is however a tradition of courtesy and service amongst librarians upon which the serious student may unfailingly rely.

This index is in no sense official and only aims at an approximately complete list of periodicals (including the serials of learned societies) available in Britain, but it is hoped that few important titles, prior to 1921, have been omitted. Many of ephemeral character have been included as of historical interest.

No direct responsibility for the correctness of the information given attaches to the librarians or other officials. The list has been compiled from library catalogues supplied by them and from lists made personally by the compilers. Where official catalogues have been published the information therein has been, in many cases, and as far as practicable, brought up to date. It must be noted however that the entries for the libraries of the Universities of Edinburgh, Glasgow and Liverpool comprise only periodicals still current and are based upon recently printed lists issued by these Universities.

It is generally known that by Act of Parliament the British Museum has the right to a copy of every publication issued in Great Britain but the present compilation will reveal the important fact, hitherto not generally realised and to many perhaps unknown, that the National Library in the British Museum contains also the most extensive and representative series of foreign medical and scientific periodicals in Britain. This must strengthen the many centripetal circumstances now tending to make Bloomsbury in coming years the post-graduate centre of the Empire.

The compilers have sought primarily to be of practical service to other research workers and in the arrangement of the work have been guided by their own experience and needs rather than by standards which guide professional librarians. Their ambition will however remain unfulfilled if the work fails to initiate a movement among the libraries to bring into effective working some practical scheme to provide London with the many serials it lacks and to eliminate the unnecessary multiplication of copies of little used periodicals of which it is surfeit. The time cannot be far distant when financial consideration and restriction of space must impose limitations upon the growth of most London libraries. Frank recognition of this should lead to the early adoption of a plan whereby two copies of every periodical publication may be available in London; one filed for reference, the other available, under proper conditions, for loan.

In conclusion, acknowledgment is due to the librarians from whom, without exception, the kindliest consideration and unstinted help have been received. We wish also to offer our grateful thanks to the Science Committee of the British Medical Association for the lively interest which it has sustained in a project which has occupied the spare moments of the past four years as well as for its generous guarantee whereby this labour of love is placed in the hands of our fellow workers at a price based upon the actual cost of publication.

R. T. LEIPER.
